REFLECTION

The Gothic period's design reflects a shift towards verticality and spirituality, seen in the towering cathedrals and intricate stone lacework. Pointed arches, ribbed vaults, and flying buttresses are standout architectural elements that supported the grandeur of these structures. The use of stained glass windows allowed for a divine interplay of light, coloring the interiors with a celestial aura. Gargoyles not only adorned buildings but also served as functional rainwater drainage, showcasing the fusion of form and function. Overall, the Gothic design encapsulates an era of religious devotion and architectural innovation.
